What did you want to be growing up?

An astronaut, pilot, dinosaur?

Cul-de-sacs and high school sports define the American Dream. Growing up in Middle America, everyone is desperate to be special but not different. We go to college, sleep around, drink a little too much, and graduate just as confused as we were when we were 18.

This is the story of three college friends on the last day before graduation. Alternating chapters reveal correlations between the past and present. They are interlinked more than we realize. We can't change the past but it doesn't matter, because we can change the future.
