Prior to the publication of Revolution of Forms in 1999, few were aware that the most outstanding architectural achievement of the Cuban Revolution, the Escuelas Nacionales de Arte (National Art School), stood neglected just outside Havana. Three architects who aimed to reinvent architecture just as the revolution hoped to reinvent society were commissioned. However, before construction was completed, the school was subjected to an ideological attack that branded it as not in keeping with revolutionary ideals. The organic complex of brick and terra-cotta Catalan-vaulted structures was abandoned, until the original publication of Revolution of Forms brought it to the attention of the world and swayed the Cuban government to commit to its restoration. This updated edition of the classic book adds a new preface, epilogue, and a revised chronology to the first edition's numerous photographs, drawings, and interviews.

Interesting Story

By James J. Varela

I saw a documentary on these buildings on PBS not long ago. My parents fled Cuba in 1960. I have always admired Cuban modernist architecture; so much of it now lay in ruins. This book makes for an interesting read not so much as for the buildings but the saga of how they came to be abandoned only to have interest in them rekindle when Fidel Castro - then still running Cuba - realized he erred by not allowing them to be built and persecuting the architects. A shame more books have not been written on Cuban modernist architecture. Saving many of these homes and other buildings would be impossible now. The reason for the years of neglect was Communist dogma. The vast majority of the famous architects of the pre-Communist era such as Max Borges Jr fled the country when my parents did.

Well documented updated edition

By Henk Döll

Perfect example of how a publication can contribute to the renovation of a historic complex, in this case the remarkable art schools of Havana. The well documented updated edition shows photographs both from before and after renovation.
