Worst title in the history of publishing (no joke)

By A.H. Wolfe

I know they say you can't judge a book by its cover, but sometimes you can. The fact that this author thought, "Transformational Leadership: 92 Tips For Using The Different Types Of Leadership To Identify Leadership Traits That Uncover Your Leadership Strengths" was a good title tells me everything I need to know about this author's ability to write and think in clear and useful ways. What convoluted, meaningless nonsense. The word Leadership used no fewer than four times in one title; that has to be a world record. No way I would risk even ten seconds of my life to read the contents of this thing. I have never seen a greater testament to the good old days when books actually had editors and went through something called an "editorial process." This title would have been laughed out of the lowest-level editorial meeting at the crappiest publishing house and mounted on the wall as a joke for all time.
